New Potatoes SA independent chair Andrew MacDonald has more than 30 years' experience in financial and professional services.

MacDonald joins hort board

CONSULTANT Andrew MacDonald has been appointed as the new independent chair of industry body Potatoes SA.

Dr MacDonald replaces Brian Cunningham, who had been in the role since 2013.

Dr MacDonald is also chairman and non-executive director of ASX-listed Contango Income Generator and managing director of Mieza Consulting, and has more than 30 years' experience in the financial and professional services.

Mr Cunningham said Dr MacDonald's appointment comes as Potatoes SA enters an exciting new phase of its evolution.

"We're delighted to have someone of such calibre both globally and domestically come on board to help guide Potatoes SA as we look to build on the momentum we have built in the past four years," Mr Cunningham said.

Potatoes SA chief executive officer Robbie Davis said the not-for-profit association would continue to build on its capacity to deliver relevant, timely information and services to stakeholders in the nation's largest horticulture sector.

"This new strengthening at chair level will ensure our strategic direction remains on target as the business further evolves, involving new complexities and challenges," she said.

Ms Davis also paid tribute to the foundations laid by Mr Cunningham, particularly in corporate governance.

Dr MacDonald said he was delighted with his new role.

"Potatoes SA has a unique opportunity to represent and drive this important sector of the state's primary production," he said.
